A Season of Stone Crab

Many native Floridians eagerly look forward to October 15th each year, for the opening of the stone crab season. However, the sweet, succulent meat of stone crab doesn't just jump on the table; Florida crabbers work long, arduous hours to bring in nearly 5 million pounds of claws each year. Stone crabbing is a perfect example of a natural renewable resource. When a stone crab is caught, only claws measuring at least 2 ¼ inches are removed, then the crab is returned to the water, where it quickly regenerates a new claw. In this way, stone crabs often live to their life expectancy of 10 years.
